Research Centers

My colleagues at Shaanxi Normal University, Xian, China and I established the Northwest Socio-economic Development Research Center (NSDRC) in 2004. The center has three missions. One is to train local professors, graduate students and professionals in social science research methods (quantitative and qualitative). Second is to conduct regional surveys. The third mission is to produce academic and policy relevant publications.

I am also a research associate for the Center for Experimental Economics in Education (CEEE) at Shaanxi Normal University. CEEE is committed to reducing the educational inequalities in rural China through policy relevant research, early childhood education and scholarships.
